WireGuard is an open source project developed by Google that implements a virtual private network (VPN) technology. This technology will allow you to share your Internet connection with other computers on your local area network (LAN). Such as to share your Internet connection with a laptop and a mobile phone, as well as remotely connect to Wi-Fi at the place of work. Getting to know WireGuard WireGuard started development in 2016 by Google's Threat Analysis Group. The project is actually a fork of the software named ipsec-tools that allows us to protect IPSec connections. The functionality provided by this application is based on those contained in ipsec-tools. This is mainly so that developers of ipsec-tools to incorporate the changes made by the open source community. A major difference between ipsec-tools and WireGuard is that the latter supports peer-to-peer connections, something that is not possible with the former. Another difference is that the encryption used in WireGuard is not...
