Its Purpose, and its "Do or Die".CT-guided stereotaxic navigation in the management of intracranial arteriovenous malformations: a single center experience. Several neurosurgical procedures have been used to treat AVMs. The goal of treatment is to decrease the risk of re-hemorrhage and to improve neurological deficits. CT-guided stereotactic navigation allows for precise insertion of a microcatheter and then precise placement of coils. Between July 2004 and

July 2010, we prospectively analyzed all procedures that were performed. These procedures included transarterial embolization, superselective catheterization, and detection of feeding arteries. This single center experience reviews all consecutive patients who underwent a CT-guided stereotactic procedure with a goal of decreasing the risk of re-hemorrhage and improving neurological deficits. We performed a total of 111 procedures in 92 patients, including 78 embolizations, 19 superselective catheterizations, and 4 detection procedures. A total of 136 procedures were performed. The mean dose of iodinated contrast was 120.4 (range, 45-320) mL. Overall radiation exposure was 2.58 (range, 0.7-4.97) mSv. The average time to complete the procedure was 7.3 minutes (range, 3.5-14.7 min). The procedures were technically successful in 100 cases. Early postprocedure complications included hematoma in 2 patients. There was no hematoma after superselective catheterization. Two patients with hemorrhage had an early re-hemorrhage after embolization. None of the patients had late complications. Two patients developed AVMs associated with polycystic kidney disease. The AVM patients were followed for a mean of 29.3 months. Seven patients developed AVM recurrence, 3 of whom received repeat embolization. The most common complication in our series was re-hemorrhage after cerebral AVM embolization. The CT-guided stereotactic approach with transarterial embolization seems to be
