The overall objective of this program is to help individuals with this disorder to successfully perform on the Pfund et al. Specialized Driving Test (SDT) to obtain licenses to drive motorized vehicles to insure safe operations of these highly complex machines. A second objective of the program is to improve the clinical management of individuals with MS by increasing our knowledge of psychiatric and physical problems related to driving as well as the behavioral aspects associated with MS and with driving. The first two years of this program will lead to the development of a model that will be expanded during the next five years. This model will be used to examine the impact of MS on a person's ability to safely drive. Subjects (N=100) with MS will be enrolled in this program for 6 months; they will be evaluated clinically, functionally, and psychiatrically; and they will be tested on the Pfund et al. SDT. Subjects with MS will have the opportunity to identify themselves in the program's sample list if they desire to do so. Additional subjects (N=50) with MS will complete this program and be followed at 2 and 5 years after they complete it. These subjects will be identified from the regional registry of persons with MS in the state of Michigan. Only subjects with MS who meet the eligibility requirements, including a determination of whether they can drive to perform the SDT, will be enrolled in this program. Of the eligible subjects, 50% will be male and 50% will be female. This sample will consist of 4 groups based on the presence of MS and its severity. We will assess the relationship between each predictor variable and performance of the SDT. We will also determine whether, and if so, what type of intervention(s) can be used to improve the driving ability of this population. We will pursue several specific research objectives. These include, (1) comparing performance of the SDT by a group of subjects with MS with performance by healthy matched control subjects; (2) determining the effect of fatigue on SDT performance by subjects with MS; (3) assessing the ability of motor evoked potentials (MEPs) to predict SDT performance by subjects with MS; and (4) establishing the relationship between the symptoms of MS as determined by the Expanded Disability Status Scale (EDSS) and the SDT.Q: angularJS: How to remove an attribute from an array of objects with a condition I want to remove an attr('href') from an array with a condition. What's New In Adobe Photoshop 2021 (Version 22.0.1)?

One of the coolest features of the new standard called 'Android M', or the latest OS version of the platform, is the new gesture-based navigation by the Android team. As mentioned in the previous articles, gestures allow a user to control the various apps, but in this new version, they are expanded to new features. As Android's gesture navigation gets into the Android 5.0, and if your current Android is running an older version, you can still use gestures for easier navigation. One of the most common gestures are the two-finger swipe left/right, which allows you to go back and forth between pages, and the double tap on the screen to go to the notification tray. For example, if your already inside the camera app, and then you double tap on the screen, you will go back to your home screen. So instead of having to go back and forth between the app and the home screen, you just double tap on the screen. You can also access all of your installed apps by swiping from the left side of the screen. You can even open up your recent app by double swiping it. For quick access to your favorite apps, just swipe from the bottom right of the screen. There's a lot more that goes along with navigation by swiping, and we will get back to them in a later article, but for now, let's focus on the part that you may not be using right now, the home screen. Swipe down from the top of the screen to open up the home screen. If you want to go to specific apps, just swipe from the bottom right and all of your apps will appear. Again, don't swipe from the left if you are inside of an app or another menu. Now, let's move on to the next feature, and that's shortcuts. When you have a lot of apps on the home screen and the time to launch something, you can drag the app from the bottom right corner and it will appear on top of the home screen. To remove the shortcut or app from the home screen, just drag it back to the bottom right corner of the screen. Just like that, your home screen is refreshed. Of course, you can move and rearrange your apps at any time, so you can have shortcuts inside of apps or on top of the home screen. If you
