If you don't mind having a window, instead of a scroll bar, you can try this: EDIT: added the type, removed (type="auto", I guess that's the culprit) EDIT2: there is something wrong with windows as I can't do that on my machine, but you can remove all the spaces in the end of the line and it should be fine. like: Update type="" /full update type="auto", is also not working, only type="" or type="auto" (without the space between them) As the dust settles on the 60th anniversary of the assassination of Robert Kennedy, Nation journalist John Nichols examines the significance of RFK's death in the context of modern American politics. It is a significant fact of the history of the United States that two of its presidential assassins, John Wilkes Booth and Lee Harvey Oswald, were black. Their deaths have been forgotten. But those of Robert Francis Kennedy and Martin Luther King are much more alive. The man charged with killing Kennedy was James Earl Ray. He is in prison. The man known as the "real assassin" is Sirhan Sirhan. He maintains he was a patsy. The assassinations of the Kennedys are connected to the story of America. The tragedy of both assassinations is that they focused the world's attention on the American domestic scene rather than on the story that had been unfolding around the world. A month before Kennedy was assassinated, for example, Fidel Castro had just taken power in Cuba. A month after RFK was killed, Khrushchev declared that the Soviet Union had been forced to start an arms race with the United States. One month before Kennedy was killed, the Berlin Wall was going up. The wall would go up around the world. After RFK was killed, the bomb in Birmingham, Ala., divided the nation. The first black mayor of a major American city—Maynard Jackson—would serve only four years. Richard Nixon, a few weeks after he was elected president, in April 1973, would begin turning the clock back in the United States. When RFK was murdered, Lyndon Johnson was preparing to leave office. When Martin Luther King was murdered, Richard Nixon was preparing
