“The biggest change to the game is the way the ball moves through the air,” San Marco said. “The higher you move, the more movement you have on the ball. You can see the result of that when you see how every player move with the ball. The game is smoother and more stable because the ball moves better with your input and you feel the pitches, teams and stadiums better.” This technology also allows for more control and finesse in gameplay. “The ball control is very smooth and you feel like you’re moving it quicker with your foot,” San Marco continued. “When you play against a team that has great movement and positioning, everything changes. You must move the ball to counter or start a move. The ball knows your speed, and you can vary speed in different areas of the pitch.” This new control will transform the way you move the ball, make through-balls, receive it, and also actuate off-ball movements. For players that take a more traditional route, San Marco notes that the new “SimVision” system will also change how players receive the ball. “If you’re not a traditional player, you can take on any kind of pass, but you feel the pressure of the player next to you,” San Marco said. “You can flick it, drive it, or pass it just as easily. If you have to take a pass, the pressure change is always different.” Making moments come alive will also be a key feature. “The ball knows where you want it to go and where you want your team mates to go,” San Marco said. “You can make something simple, but create something spectacular. You can see the atmosphere of the match changing when you do something good.” “I wouldn’t be surprised if this game sells more than 16 million units,” San Marco concluded. “We wanted to create a game like no other, and we think we did. This is the future of video games.” Download Fifa 22 For Windows 10 Crack on PlayStation 4 this August.
