Half a Day and Other Stories (Genre:.This invention relates generally to a thrust reverser system for a jet engine. The thrust reverser system may be incorporated into a fan nacelle for a turbofan gas turbine engine or in an engine cowling for a turboprop engine. Jet engine cowlings and fan nacelles are designed so that air passing through the engine is prevented from passing over the engine thrust reverser system, and any component attached thereto. One well-known example of such a system is the variable area fan nozzle thrust reverser system which has a large single, movable fan nozzle blade to control air flow into the engine. However, each engine thrust reverser system is subject to complex dynamics, which are often difficult to predict and control. In the case of the fan nozzle system, it is known that control of the fan nozzle blade positioning is generally difficult, to the extent that a fan nozzle blade may need to be guided by a drive link, in order for the fan nozzle to be able to move past the fan nacelle and into the airstream. Generally, to meet these requirements, a fan nozzle system must be designed to withstand forces that are generated due to the variable nature of the application and also due to external loads. Therefore, a fan nozzle designed for a particular application will generally have additional necessary strength beyond that required for the application alone, such as the thrust reverser system. Certain applications, such as an aircraft engine thrust reverser system, typically require a fan nozzle system to meet very high criteria of strength and weight. One known design uses a polymeric material for the fan nozzle. Thus, various conventional attempts to fabricate fan nozzle systems have tried to make them lighter and stronger. However, these designs still have been unable to optimize these parameters, in part because of the high costs associated with polymeric materials.
