A quantitative method was developed to characterize the inflammatory changes of the cornea in patients with infectious keratitis. An analysis algorithm developed for the Center for Disease Control's (CDC) automated cytopathic intracellular organism (CIO) assay was used to analyze images from the Zeiss laser scanning system in a blinded fashion. Reference files containing known CIO images and standard quantitative criteria were used to determine the overall algorithm performance. A quantitative diagnosis of the degree of stromal inflammatory disease was obtained by comparing the percentage of stromal inflammatory cells with the reference criteria. A Wilcoxon signed rank test was used to determine the significance of the quantitative diagnosis on the clinical diagnosis (concordant or discordant), and the interobserver variability was analyzed by regression analysis. The analysis algorithm provides a quantitative diagnosis of the degree of stromal inflammatory disease that is concordant with the clinical diagnosis in 93% of the cases (40 of 43). The quantitative diagnosis obtained by the algorithm has a larger variance than those of the clinical diagnosis, because it is based on quantitation of cells present in a single image and does not reflect the distribution of inflammatory cells throughout the area of the image. This method is very efficient and can be performed in approximately 10 min.Q: How to check if jenkins is "entering" an unknown job? In the newer versions of Jenkins, since the deprecated GUI interface has been replaced with the Jenkins CLI interface, the 'entering' event is very useful for show information to the user who is currently triggering the e79caf774b
