What's new:

Google has been updating their search engine portal as of the last day or so. For any fans of Magic or the web, the move is interesting.

For instance, if Google were to switch to using Google as a good digital research engine, you will notice that the majority of previews are smaller and not as well-produced. Instead, instead, Google started switching things up with an all-text interface. Also, along with switch, Google pulled off the “social” aspect with different feeds for different sites, and instead of using media, they’re integrating photos and other things for those sites. The fact that a novice has found out about magic and pagan paganist magic by searching Google shows that maybe it’s the interaction of the Google search engine itself, or maybe it’s the fact that Google is simply a good search engine and should not be blamed for someone pulling up info on a subject they’re interested in. Regardless, it’s just like that, sometimes people need to crawl out of the self-created hole they’ve created for themselves. They need to use something besides their computer, something that won’t only interfere with them but their Internet usage in general. “A kingdom is a web of inter-related relationships, not a separate, self-contained structure as an egoistic goal would be. Hence we need to assume that we and others do not know what’s best for us, when we should form relationships, and how.” There’s so much to it. What’s good for me isn’t necessarily what’s good for me. What’s good for you isn’t necessarily what’s good for you. So when the head gets in the way, you need to try and look at things from a completely different perspective. Don’t let the ego or your head get in the way of what’s going to happen. Make a Magic Circle and see what happens. Don’t make a magical point on your Magic Circle because you think that’s what I always do. Create your own rules and see what happens. There’s so much to it. So many things to look into. As Hindus call it, it’s the ultimate philosophy of life. Don’t let the fact that you go out
