What's new:

(Space Channel Infinity) "Space Maze" is an episode of Space Channel 5. The episode features the character Wally Woo, a mad scientist played by Fred Willard. Portrayed as a sapient alien, he is the leader of a race of purple aliens with blue glowing eyes. His name means 'enough,' in his language. Much of his dialog is cartoonishly broad and does not make much sense. He utters, "Eat my space dust!" and responds to almost any given question with, "Hello, heavy stuff!", an intergalactic version of "hey, how's it going?", and a flat response such as, "I can't, I'm in a time warp!" According to his own story, Wally Woo was in the shower wearing a nebulizer when the alien speedster Spider Doom, the great interstellar hedgehog, found him. He appeared to be except for his mouth, hands, and the ends of his hair, which covered him completely. Spider Doom had an unfortunate accident with the nebulizer and as he was recovering, he turned into Wally Woo, who proceeded to put himself in a beauty spa. Production In an interview, Fred Willard said that this episode was his favorite episode of the series because it included a funny and "painful" audio dog audition tape from an animal rights group. He knew this tape would be played when he appeared on The Tonight Show with Jay Leno in the fall, as well as in parts of that episode he was supposed to appear in. Seeing it was comedic gold, he wrote the script and presented it to the producers of the Space Channel 5. At the time, they were filming Space 69 and told him they just loved his stuff. As it turns out, they had a deal to occasionally use him and would go through production and then half the episode he was in was the Space Channel 5 version of a 1970s sitcom, leading to the outer space-infused stories of the show. Plot summary The episode begins when Wally Woo wanders through a small and strange town in a time warp. He appears to be tired and worn out. The old woman who waves him down and offers him a ride to her house feeds him a strange looking pea and drops him off at an old "time warp" store. He then enters the building through a time warp door, runs through the simulated tv-room and arrives in a time warp at the newly built mall.
