The most accurate method for detecting low birthweight (LBW) infants in a surveillance system is unknown, but should take into account the ability of a variable to detect infants who have LBW as well as the variability of LBW in the population. This is of particular importance in multiethnic populations in which the rate of LBW is heterogeneous. We evaluated the contribution of physiologic variables to the detection of LBW in a multiethnic cohort. This was a prospective evaluation of physiologic measures at the time of delivery that could be used as predictors of LBW in a multiethnic cohort of 2,855 deliveries at Brigham and Women's Hospital, Boston, Mass, over a 2-year period. Logistic models were fit to examine the contribution of each physiologic measure to LBW detection. Examination of each physiologic variable yielded an area under the receiver operating characteristic curve of approximately 0.6 for the prediction of LBW. A combination of clinical variables proved the most useful predictor of LBW in this population of Technical Field This disclosure relates to semiconductor packages, particularly to a leadless semiconductor package having a plurality of bonding pads on a bottom surface thereof. 2. Description of the Related Art Semiconductor packages usually have a plurality of leads to provide electrical connection between a semiconductor die and a printed circuit board (PCB). In a conventional leadless semiconductor package, the leads are produced by etching and forming processes. However, the costs of producing leadless semiconductor packages are relatively high. For solving the above problem, a leadless semiconductor package with a flip chip structure is designed. In a flip chip package, a plurality of bonding pads of a semiconductor die is provided on a bottom surface of the semiconductor die. The bonding pads are disposed in an area sized for a plurality of conductive pads, so that the area of the bottom surface of the semiconductor die is increased. In addition, the pitch of the bonding pads on the bottom surface of the semiconductor die is relatively small, which increases the difficulty of wire bonding. Also, as the pitch of the conduct
