Tip Keep an eye on the right side of the screen, which provides a detailed overview of your Image Window. It tells you how many layers are currently open in your images. You can see how many you have, and you can work with many of the available tools, including a selection tool, a zoom tool, and more. You can also use the Workspace area to specify preferences for the program to run in. There are lots of options to customize how Elements works, especially for more experienced users. On the left side of the image, you can see the standard options available in this version of Photoshop Elements. On the right, you can see the Character Viewer options and some of the tools you can choose to use for creating images and editing existing images.

There are very few tools that you won't find in the file, canvas, page-layout, and selection areas (which are to the right).

A teacher in Pakistan's capital has been placed under house arrest after an eight-year-old student was killed when he was hit by a landslide while playing in a field. Kulsoom Aftab, the teacher, was immediately arrested after the boy was killed by a landslide that swept away rocks and buried his body in the school courtyard, said Hammad Azhar of the Islamabad Railway Police. The body of the young boy was found at around 9.15 am local time on Friday after he went missing during recess in the morning. Zakir Khan, a resident of the area, said that he heard a loud noise, and went to the school to investigate. He found the boy lying on the ground with his hands and feet sticking out, Khan told the AFP news agency. "The area around the school was completely blocked by huge boulders and rocks. Several children were rescued, but not the boy," he said. Another resident told Al Jazeera that the class often played in the courtyard. "I saw two to three children playing, but the stone pit was full of stones. I saw a boy stuck in the stones. It was a horrible scene." Clamour for the teacher Kulsoom Aftab was immediately taken into police custody, Hammad Azhar said. Shah Mehmood Qureshi, the justice minister, condemned the incident and called it a "murder" and "a gross violation of human rights". "Such an incident has never happened before in the history of Islamabad's schools," he said. The incident followed a major killing of two young children on Thursday at a public school in Islamabad in a single shooting. On Wednesday, the capital saw its first mall fire, which left at least eight people dead. Security was stepped up in Pakistan's cities following the mall fire, and critics demanded the government to take similar steps to protect schools.

"Security in school is unheard of.

I don't know if schools are a hotbed of militancy or not, but safety in schools is a top priority," said a teacher in Islamabad. [...] "I don't know, but there is a danger everywhere. Why not teachers?" said teacher Zareen, who has a 10-year-old son. Azhar said he was monitoring police and army forces who had been deployed to ensure security at the school. The

The Art of Steve Jobs with Michael Mayer Photo: AG Every man has his own style in business, and Steve Jobs was no exception. Michael Mayer, the creative director for the September cover story, has shared with Yahoo! Shine just how he created the eyes in Jobs' portrait. Yahoo! Shine: What was your process for painting the eyes for the cover of the September 2011 issue of Vogue? Michael Mayer: There was no real process. Steve Jobs' face was modeled on his chin, so when I began, I was still working on the other elements of the portrait. I read through various Steve Jobs' tweets, and I was reminded of the character Mark Zuckerberg, from the movie The Social Network. He used a white board in a very creative way and was the inventor of a new typeface. And that's Steve Jobs. While he may not have invented Photoshop or the tablet, his innovations in communication and technology have disrupted the entire world. Steve Jobs' eyes were one of the final touches. I don't do things easily and thought the
