Published: 7:17 AM May 24, 2019 Updated: 6:15 PM September 17, 2020 Ireland's small scale farming sector has warned that Ireland must get on board with giving small landholders agricultural support in order to prevent a food crisis. The Irish Countryside Alliance (ICA) and ICA members at a meeting in Athlone on Saturday said that all viable alternatives to expensive pharmaceuticals for livestock farming must be taken into account when Ireland grapples with the negative effects that herd size regulations have on the country. In recent years, the government has introduced legislation that forces farmers to fit their herds with expensive microchips. It is a move that has been criticised because, without official checks and balances, farmers can be forced to fit their livestock with the expensive devices without knowing if they are genuinely required. Instead, ICA members proposed a scheme which supports small-scale farming to ensure that farmers can grow the maximum amount of food without creating negative impacts on the environment. The ICA said that, in order to prevent a food crisis, small farmers have to be given the right to use best practices which allow them to maintain health and wellbeing standards. ICA chair, Joe Murray, said: "The government have introduced much needed legislation to prevent cruelty to livestock but our members are at risk of being stuck with very expensive and unnecessary 'fiddly' microchips on their livestock. You may also want to watch: "We are calling on the government to halt any further legislation which will force farmers to spend money on these devices and, instead, have them pay into a capital scheme to support sustainable farming. "The government must be given a once in a lifetime chance to show us that they truly care about our country and to give us an opportunity to help steer Ireland to a better future."After Final Fantasy XV was delayed for a release, there has been a lot of uncertainty about the status of Final Fantasy Versus XIII. However, recent statements by producer Yoshinori Kitase have assured fans that we will see more than Final Fantasy X and Final Fantasy X-2 combined. During an interview with Japanese radio program Namco Bandai Game Music, Kitase revealed that the staff at Square Enix have received requests to make Versus XIII. It was confirmed by official lines that Final Fantasy X and Final Fantasy X-2 will be the last main numbered Final Fantasy games made by Square Enix. Fans have been wondering if the company will be continuing
