image editing

Editing, in linguistics, is the alteration of a speech or written text. In the context of film, visual effects in motion pictures are editing. Various styles of editing are common in movies: The most common form is the straightforward cut and montage in which several shots are juxtaposed and then lingered to emphasize their juxtaposition. Editor cuts are done to show events that occurred after the preceding scene. Another common type of editing is the cross-cut, in which two or more shots from two or more different angles are juxtaposed in such a way that the editing creates the impression of a
