Key macro manager lets you quickly and easily create macros from shortcuts, scripts or text on a single keyboard. It is similar to the Windows program known as AutoHotKey. KEYMACRO has a well-designed layout with intuitive interface. It is easy to learn and allows you to do almost everything you might expect from a program of this type. However, there are a few limitations, such as the inability to record macros that include more than one key stroke. To create a new macro in this program, you will need to first enter the command and the hotkey that you want to execute. Then you can choose the duration for which the macro should be active. You can limit the number of times the macro can be run. Furthermore, you can choose whether the macro should be active immediately after the execution of the hotkey. Once you have created the macro, you can save it in the Key Macro Library for future use. You can then add the keyboard combination to the Windows' system registry so that you do not have to create a shortcut to run the macro.
